Mr. Ibrahimi has proposed an immediate ceasefire and a joint military commission to monitor it, including representatives of Arab and other

Mr. Morad rejected demands of rival faction leader Prime Minister Gulhuddin Hekmatyar that Mr. Rabbani must resign at the end of June, saying the president's legitimacy rested on the Kabul grand national assembly held in December 1992. The establishment of a

International bids expected for Aqaba power plant

P ( 200 ) 2 AMMAN (J.T.) — The Jordan Electricity Authority (JEA) expects to receive all bids for the implementation of the second phase of the Aqaba Thermal Power Station by July 4 and, according to a statement Saturday. Many of the bids will be from European, Japanese and American firms.

> A JEA statement quoted by the Jordan News Agency, Petra, said that the second pbase of the Aqaba project entails procurement, installation, testing and operating two thermal power units, each with a 130 megawatt

Petra quoted the statement as noting that the Ministry of Planning and the Arab Fund for Economic and Social Development (AFESD) last week signed a $115 million loan agreement to help implement the project.

A total of $85 million of this loan will be used to finance part of the thermal station project while the rest will be used to partly finance the main Aqaba power station and also part of the cost of linking the Egyptian-Jordanian power grids, said the statement.

The report quoted the Ministry of Planning as saying that the Jeddah-based Islamic Development Bank has promised to provide a $25 million loan for these projects while the Japanese government has allocated $45 million, to be granted to Jordan if the JEA requires additional funds.

The agency said that the JEA is expected to award the tender of the Thermal Power Station in Aqaba by the end of 1994, but the second phase of the project is not expected to become operational before the second balf of 1997.

According to the statement, the increase in electric power is required in view of the growing demand for electrification of all rural areas of Jordan. Last year, it said, demand for electric power in Jordan registered an increase of 8.4 per cent over the pre-

Zarqa governor calls for stemming pollution

By Elia Nasrallah Jordan Times Staff Reporter

AMMAN — The governor of Zarqa, Misleh Tarawneh, Sunday issued an appeal to the concerned authorities to undertake immediate and appropriate measures to belp curtail the intense pollution in Zarqa, Ruseifa and other towns and villages within the Zarga Governorate.

The population of Zarqa Governorate, now believed to be more than 641,000 according to 1993 statistics of the department of statistics, has increased six times over the past two decades, largely due to the return of expatriates in the wake of the Gulf war, thus putting extra pressure on the environment, according to Mr. Tarawneh.

The Zarqa Governorate, which has a total area of 4,595 square metres, bouses 40 factories of which 20 employ water in their production or refrigeration processes and dump waste as well as solid pollutants in the Zarga

According to Mr. Tarawneh, who is now head of a Zarga mnnicipality committee appointed by the government some measures are being followed to stem pollution. He said no new licences for factories or poultry and sheep farms are being issued, except for those to be set up in remote areas, and the process of removing the existing farms from the centre of the governorate to outlying regions is underway.

The Water Authority last month announced that the Waste Water Treatment Plant at Khirbet Al Samra is being expanded to deal with the buge amounts of waste water from the Amman and Zarga regions. It said that the plant's present capacity is 69,000 cubic metres of waste water daily but in reality it is taking 130,000 cubic metres.

While strict surveillance is being practised to ensure stream with detrimental consequences to the local residents, the soil and the underground water resources, added Mr. Taraw-

Referring to other sources of pollution, Mr. Tarawneh said that their sources are mainly the nearby Khirbet Al Samra Waste Water Treatment Plant, the poisonous fumes emitted by the Jordan Petroleum Refinery Company (JPRC) and the waste left behind the brick factories, slanghter houses and the bad smell of the sheep and cattle farms.

The governor's assistant, Sameh Al Majali, said that the refinery alone burns an average of 550 tonnes of fuel daily to produce various oil products, causing buge amounts of carbon dioxide and other poisonous gases to fill the atmosphere endangering people's

He said that the municipality is currently encouraging the planting of shrubs and forest as well as fruit trees to be irrigated with the treated water from the river as one aspect in the current drive to improve the environment.

Mr. Majali appealed to the concerned authorities to build a sewerage system in Ruseifa and introduce measures to stem the amount of polluoon caused by the various factories, the refinery and the thermal power plant. He said the municipality is currently building a ring road around Zarqa to help avert trucks and beavy vebicles from passing through the residential areas in yet another bid to curtail damage to the govemorate's environment.

Bridging the gaps

THE WORLD BANK is giving the Jordanian economy a clean bill of health after Jordan met most, if not all, of the bank's recommendations for attaining self-reliance. This much was made known by Ram Chopra, the head of the bank's Al Mashrek Division, who said Saturday that Jordan had in fact confounded expectations in bouncing back in 1992 to achieve an impressive 11 per cent economic growth. Mr. Chopra was fair enough to admit that most of Jordan's economic woes stemmed "from a series of shocks that were imposed on it by regional and international developments." No doubt the World Bank official was thinking of the waves of refugees that hit Jordan, the Gulf crisis that brought the Jordanian economy to a standstill and the Middle East conflict that continued to strain the resources of the Kingdom. Between the lines it could be presumed that at least part of the problem lies within us as well notwithstanding the external factors that are mainly responsible for the economic hardships still felt by Jorda-

Where we may part company with the perspective of the World Bank and its sister institution, the International Monetary Fund, is over the apparent lack of concern for the plight of the poverty-stricken Jordanians who now make up a sizeable portion of the Jordanian population. It is one thing to cement a strong foundation for the Jordanian economy and solidify the infrastructure of the country in order to put us closer than ever to self-reliance but quite another to accomplish these economic feats at no considerable social and political cost.

Minister of Planning Hisham Al Khatib pointed to this dimension of the problem when he defended the country's non-compliance with all the economic prescriptions of the World Bank. "The bank has always tried to convince us to accept conditions and covenants which it felt are in the best interest of Jordan," the minister commented during Saturday's ceremony marking the 50th anniversary of the World Bank in Amman. "Usually they were, but not always,"

Dr. Khatib continued to say on that occasion. The minister of planning has hit the nail on the bead when he explained why Jordan "rebelled" a bit here and there when he said that Jordan resisted some of the bank's conditions, "not because they were not rational, but because they are not always in the best interest of political and social considerations of the country."

In other words, whereas the bank can afford to be cold blooded about its recommendations to developing countries, we cannot afford but to be compassionate in following through these proposals. With emotions running high in these contemporary times when the peace process is still less than half way in attaining its objectives and the poverty line in the country assuming new ominous heights, Jordan cannot afford to be just "rational" or "functional" in pursuing its economic development goals. Otherwise we could end up destroying with one hand what we may have constructed by the other. Bridging the gap between the haves and the have-nots in the country must always be our guiding light as we charter our course in the direction of economic

ARABIC PRESS COMMENTARIES

IN AN editorial entitled the Palestinian refugees and their unknown future, Al Ra'i Arabic daily Sunday criticised the world community for separating the refugees question from the Palestine issue, which is part of the Middle East problem. Separating the refugees question from the whole Middle East issue means delaying any solution for their problem prior to arranging for their settlement in Arab countries, something which is resisted not only by the Palestinian people themselves but also by the Arab states hosting the refugees, said the daily. Imposing a solution on the region without settling the refugees issue in a satisfactory manner leaves the whole peace process bimping, added the daily. Furthermore, said the daily, any disregard for Jordan's legitimate demand for compensation for shouldering the bulk of the refugees burden all these years and overlooking the Kingdom's legitimate demand for the return of its occupied land and water resources are bound to render futile any talk about permanent peace in the

A COLUMNIST in Al Ra'i daily Sunday expressed dismay with Parliament's reluctance to debate and endorse the new draft labour law. It is a pity that such important law is being purposely delayed by the deputies though it promises good benefits for the workers and caters to the recent developments in the labour movement in the country, said Jamal Naji. The writer said that it is pity that the people who elected the deputies that are failing them now cannot oust them from office for their obvious failure to demand from the government that the draft law be immediately put on the agenda for dehate, said the writer. The Federation of Jordanian Labour Unions is also to blame for failing to lobby the deputies into demanding that the government respond to their demand and pass the new law that would protect workers gains and better organise the relationship between employers and workers in the country.

Jordan's human rights encounter

IT IS now official, Jordan's date with the International Human Rights (HRC) is set for July 5. The occasion wil be to probe once again into the country's human right record within the framework of the International Covenant and Civil and Poltical Rights (ICCPR). This will be the third time that the country is subjected to close scrutiny by the 16-member tribunal that man the committee. Two years ago Jordan was represented by the current Minister of Interior Salameh Hamad, who was then undersecretary of the Ministry of Interior. With all candour, Mr. Hamad did very well in explaining the country's commitment to the provisions of the covenant but was nevertheless served with judicious notice that there are still many shortcomings in Jordanian legislations and practices that needed attending Having headed the one-man delegation to the HRC summer meeting in 1992, Mr. Hamad had hardly a moment to reflect on the volley of inquiries put to him, much less to respond to them in full.

the first lesson to be drawn from that 1992 experience is never to send a one-man or two-men delegation for such a complex and painstaking dialogue with jurists well versed in the jurisprudence of the ICCPR. The second point in this context is to prepare ourselves for the unanswered question of 1992 and the would be inquiries for the period of that transpired since that year. The HRC has compiled a list of issues that it intends to pursue with the Jordanian delegation but one can never count on the human rights panel to confine themselves to the written subjects. Much more will surely be posed, especially in view of the fact that non-governmental organisations, both national and international, can be expected to shower the members with additional round in March of this year. They can be expected not only to make bones about the absence of the Jordanian delegation in March but also to prepare additional topics that they would wish the members of the human rights to add to their own respective lists of concern.

Several such NGOs were in fact prepared for the missed

Before going any further in offering some guidelines for the upcoming Jordanian confrontation with the HRC, I hasten to point out that we are already in deep trouble for not distributing its third periodic report nationally. The Jordanian report is not classified information and it is already published and disseminated by the U.N. as an official document. Judging by past experiences, the burnan rights experts would want to know why we have not given copies of the report to the public, especially to people who are connected with the buman rights cause. We still have 10 days or so to remedy this omission and I would therefore recommend very seriously that immediate efforts be taken to rectify this fault. It is definite that all the members will inquire wby the country's report has not been publicised before its consideration by them.

There is no harm in doing so right away and every harm in refraining from doing so soon. It is not expected that the report will be distributed free of charge to every man and woman on the street. What is expected is to make it available to Parliament, the judiciary, the lawyers' association, the press, local NGOs and the universities.

We have a lot to be proud of already. Surely we still have to go some more before we can assert that we have met our treaty obligations under the ICCPR. But this is the name of the game. No state party has been able to meet all its obligations under the covenant even though they are legally obligated to do so. The difference between conventions and U.N. resolutions lies in the fact that the former impose legal obligations and the latter hands down only pulitical commitments, unless of course they are adopted by the U.N.

That is why when HRC acts as an appeal court with reference to private complaints that are presented to it under the Optional Protocol, it makes rulings that over turn court decisions of the highest courts of the land subject of such complaints. The HRC has reversed supreme court decisions of many countries which have acceded to the Optional Protocol and its judgements are heeded as if they pronounced by the bighest judicial organ of the country.

The moral of this writing is to view the deliberations and judgements of the HRC as legally binding on Jordan. Jordan has made great strides in the development and consolidation of its democratic process. Human rights causes have been hailed by both His Majesty King Hussein and His Royal Highness Crown Prince Hassan as pivotal for the overall progress of the Kingdom. We cannot afford to even appear as "underdeveloped" in the presentation of our reports to the various international human rights fora. We certainly do not deserve an ugly face in our international encounters. Those of us who go out of their way to mar our image by not taking seriously our treaty obligations should be repri-

In the final analysis, we need to establish an anthority to deal with such international ohligations. Other countries have either created a high post for buman rights or made serious efforts to establish an effective agency for this purpose. In my estimation, anybody who ridicules the creation of such machineries or frustrates their establishment is guilty of harming the national interest and image. I hope and trust that both King Hussein and Prince Hassan will spearhead the campaign to institutionalise our commitments under the various international treaties. Otherwise there appears to be no hope that such proposals will ever see the light of day.

Romanian politicians gear up for battle

By Peter Humphrey Reuter

BUCHAREST — Romanian politicians are drawing up battle lines for a showdown this week which could affect the authority and future of the minority left-wing government and President Ion Iliescu.

The opposition geared up to attack the rulers on two fronts on Monday with a noconfidence motion planned against Prime Minister Nicolae Vacaroiu and a bid to impeach Mr. Iliescu for violating judicial independence on property disputes. The opposition is also pondering a parliamentary boycott. The atmosphere was inflamed by an apparent vic-tory last week by trade unions, who extracted pay concessions after a three-day protest in Bucharest by thousands of workers that almost ended in violence on Mr. Vacariou's office door-the interaction between males and females. With reference to his comments about repressing sex, and boys torturing themselves that they plot to seduce women, this may or may not be true. But where is the real hlame to be laid?

According to Allah, and the Hadiths of the Prophet Mohammad, "young men, those of you who can support a marriage, and unemployment, this does pose a problem.

of handling certain problems. We need to go back to the his hadiths. Also the Kuran, which is Allah's words, needs to Blaming the press and opposition for stirring up unrest, Mr. Iliescu appealed for "calm and reason" in a statement issued through his spokesman Traian Chebeleu.

He accused the opposition "defamation, slander, lies. fabrications and offences."

The opposition appears to be buoyed by bad ratings for Mr. Illesen in a confidential poll ordered from the Irsop Polling Institute by the government's general secretar-

In a sign of concern about his image, state television has boosted news about Mr. Iliescu during the past two months, sometimes carrying four or five items on him in a single news programme in a cult-building style which re-minded many Romanians of the days of Stalinist ruler Nicolae Ceausescu, who was executed in 1989.

There have been signs of dissent in Mr. Iliescu's party of Social Democracy (PSD), which spearheads the dominant left-nationalist coalition in parliament.

Hungarian polls dispel myth of mighty ultra-right

By Emil Varadi Reuter

BUDAPEST — Any fears that Hungary's radical right would emerge as a potent political force were shattered by last month's elec-tions which exposed extreme nationalists as having next to no support.

Having played a vocal role in political life in the first four years after Communism, extreme right par-ties fell far short of the massive support they claimed to enjoy and will not be represented in the next parliament.

Their flagship organisation, the Hungarian Justice and Life Party (MIEP) led by playwright Istvan Csuraka, Hungarian, captured only 1.59 per cent of the nationwide vote for party lists, well below the five per cent limit needed for parties to get seats. Groups smaller than MIEP fared worse, facing difficulties collecting even the minimum 750 signatures required to field a candidate in elections that catapulted ex-Communist reformers in the revamped Hungarian Socialist Party back to power.

"A strong extreme right was a large bluff which was mercilessly exposed by the poll," said political scientist Laszlo Keri.

The poll's results re-vealed the MIEP had the most support in Budapest's wealthiest wards and less in workers' districts or rural areas, contradicting the party's claims to have "deep popular-national losers of the transition (from Communism to capitalism) would vote for the extreme right or for the extreme left proved to be absolntely wrong," said political scientist Laszlo Bruszt.

"The assumption that the Extreme rightists are often deeply religious intellectuals, doctors and pro-fessors who pursue the same extreme right, Christ-ian and nationalist ideals that prevailed under Admiral Miklos Horthy, who ruled in Hungary be-tween the two world wars, Mr. Burszt added. "They were a social caste which suffered much during the 40 years of com-munism," Mr. Keri said. Communists nationalised their factories and hotels. dumped them from their villas, blocked them from getting jobs, banned corespondence with members of their families who fled to the west and prevented them from travelling abroad," Mr. Keri said. "Families have been ripped apart and many fled overseas, some stopping only when they got as far as Argentina," he added. "It's no accident that Csurka gets much of his support from overseas. Their largest base is in Cleve-land."

Hungary's radical right has more in common with the 1930s than with the current era of economic crisis, Mr. Bruszt said. "The elections showed the groups who wanted the Horthy era back had no power base anymore, that these aberrant intellectuals, who had been con-ditioned to snarl, to curse Communists, Jews, work-ers, peasants and neighbouring nations, did not exist in large numbers.

"So the extreme right will have to figure out something more modern to generate mass appeal," he added.

Hungarian voters not. only deprived the extreme right of their parliamentary representation, but also kept the communist Workaway from legislative process.

But extreme rightists had a much greater influence on Hungarian politics-than did hardline Communists because they were at the heart of the ruling Hunga-rian Democratic Forum (HDF), leader of the outgoing centre-right govern-

Mr. Csurka was one of the HDF's founding fathers and had been member of the HDF's top leadership until mid-1993, when then Prime Minister Jozsef Antall forced him out of the party. Even after the split Mr. Csurka and his supporters, who established the MIEP, kept their seats in parliament.

In the eight months before the elections, the Csurkists used their proxies at the state broadcasting station to stop programmes and sack journalists critical of the right and extreme right, turning state television into a Stalinist-style propaganda machine, Mr. Keri said.

"Between two provocative programmes viewers could see lengthy portraits of "true Hungarians" who waxed lyrical about their Hungarian identity," be added. "People fed up with

Mr. Csurka's efforts were in vain as voters disenchanted with conservative rule turned to the Socialists. The liberal alliance of Free Democrats, another target of Mr. Csurka's barbs, came a distant second but still well ahead of conservatives.

MIEP's Executive President Lajos Horvath said the ontcome of election was not so bad

"We don't consider these results a fiasco because we surpassed the one per cent limit and have become eligible for state support,"

Mr. Horvath told Reuters.
"This support will enable us to build our national structure and become a serious political factor in future elections."

Neither Mr. Keri nor Mr. Braszt helieved power would antomatically fail into the hands of the extreme right should the Socialists, like their conservative predecessors, fail to get a firm grip on the country's economic and social problems.

Although the ruling Conservatives slid to their worst ever performance in a national election, they did better than feared and the prime minister has paradoxically emerged with his job more secure than it has been in more than a year.

"He is the least divisive leader we have got and also the least disliked. I think that was manifest going around the doorsteps at the election," Conservative member of parliament Peter Temple-Morris said.

As parliament reconvened this week, there was muttering in conservative ranks about the party's poor showing but not the open revolt predicted after a rout in May's council ballots and a humiliating third place in last week's easteigh by election.

The Conservatives have mountain to climb before the next election but it is more easily surmountable than seemed likely in the aftermath of Eastleigh, David Butler of Nuffield College, Oxford, wrote in the Financial Times.

Mr. Major's European ampaign, wrapping bimself in the national flag to persuade anti-Brussels Conservative Eurosceptics to vote, may not have been pretty or principled.

Its effectiveness echoed his gritty performance in soatching general election victory against the odds in 1992 and be wasted no time in declaring he could and would lead the Conservatives to a fifth straight vic-

The chance to reassert his authority in next month's well-trailed cabinet reshuffle and, crucially, the lure of tax cuts before the election mean Mr. Major cannot be written off.

Two more years of solid growth should help to dispel the impression of a drifting, incompetent government created by a long list of policy U-turns and minor scandals.

Although Labour recorded its best election result in 30 years, it needs a five per cent swing from its 1992 result - larger than it has achieved in any postwar election - to secure an overall majority in the next

Mr. Major pointed to Chancellor Helmut Kobl's victory in the Euro-poll, just months before Germany's general election, to show that voters who make mid-term protests can be counted on to return to their natural political home

In essence, Labour has spent 15 years in opposition because it was not trusted to manage the economy and keep taxes down.

Now, with Britain still recovering from its deepest recession since the 1930s and its humiliating exit from Europe's currency grid, acting Labour leader Margaret Beckett claims "the mantle of trust" has passed to Labour.

If, as expected, freshfaced Tony Blair wins the contest to succeed the late John Smith, Labour will have a modern leader free of ideological baggage who - as fearful Conservatives readily admit - is wellplaced to build up that trust.

In spite of Labour's resurgence, Mr. Major has concluded that he has no choice but to stick to bis policies because voters would see through shortterm gimmicks. It is a risky strategy that nations.

World Bank advocates inclusion of private sector in infrastructure

By P.V. Vivekanand

Jordan Times Staff Reporter

المِلَدُا مِنْ الْمُعِلَ

AMMAN — The World Bank is calling on developing countries to look closely at the benefits of reforming the traditional government approach to investing and maintaining infrastructure and switching to giving the private sector a larger role which will not only address some of the problems but also help national economies perform better and secure bigher returns.

The recommendation is the key theme in the World Bank's World Development Report for 1994 released in Washington. The report is issued every year by the World Bank focusing on different themes. Last year's report tackled world health; next year's topic is expected to be labour. In Amman, Ashok Mody, one of the seven World Baok experts and researchers who prepared the 1994 report, presented its major findings and recommendations at a gathering last week, but the contents of the report were embargoed until Sunday

In his eloquent and thorough presentation, Dr. Mody said it was time governments of developing countries shed their traditional role as the sole builder and provider of infrastructure services and allowed a gradual entry of the private sector into the area.

The immediate return of relaxing the governments' 'monolithic" approach to infrastructure will be major benefits in economic growth through diversified production, expanded trade, increased efficiency in meeting demands and improved environmental conditions, Dr. Mody said.

The report comes at a time when governments are finding increased constraints on their ability to meet demands for infrastructure because of tight budgets. As such, Dr. Mody said, "there are dramatic oportunities for the private sector" to step io and fill the gap if it is offered the

The World Bank expert noted that one of the first steps towards allowing the private sector to step into areas so far held as exclusive government monopolies was 'innovative regulation" through amendments to legislation.

In many countries, the governments cite the need to "protect the poor" against private sector exploitation and to extend subsidies to the poor as the reason for keeping a tight grip on sectors such as water and energy. Dr. Mody noted.

But such arguments "in the name of the poor," he said, are not valid sioce, by and large, the protective measures and subsidies do not serve their intended purpose. While the need for extending help to the poor is very much there, the governments shoold seek to shift the nature of subsidies to financing the people directly rather than the usage of the utility.

For example, he said, many poor housebolds in the developing world do not have connections to government-supplied water networks while huge amounts are spent as subsidies in the sector. Dr. Mody said the authorities could finance the actual connections for those who lack them and introduce a "block tariff' system under which those who consume beyond a average limit pay higher

He said it was a myth that poor households would reject righer prices for water. The World Bank study has found that the poor - the bulk of whom do not have water connections anyway - will pay a reasonable price if the au-thorities will provide them with subsidised one-time connections and good services, he said. At the same time, if efficiency is raised through costeffective management and operations then the need to increase prices also goes down, be pointed out.

"More efficient, more accessible and less-costly infrastucture services are also, of course, essential to more effective poverty reduction, World Bank President Lewis Preston wrote in a foreword to the World Development Report.

There are no hard and fast rules that are applicable across-the-board; nor is the assumption true that developing countries with li-mited financial resources are inefficient.

The study found that some low-income countries "manage to provide infrastructure services at best-practice levels." according to Michael Bruno, chief economist at the World Bank. "It shows that good management is not limited to richer

The developing world spends up to $200 billion every year - or four per cent of their gross domestic product in investing in infrastructure, hut the spending does not have the desired effect, the report said. It said despite such massive allocations, two hillion people — nearly one third of the world population - are without electric power, nearly two billion lack adequate sanitation and one billion have no access to clean water. "To cope with these challenges involves not simply investing more," said the report. "It involves reducing inefficiency and waste and doing a better joh of assessing and responding to defn the energy sector, for example, Dr. Mody said, the governments could start with separating the three different phases: Generation, transmission and distribution. In the initial stages, the government could keep a close control over the sector by maintaining its role in one of the phases while letting the private sector manage the other two under regulate regimes, if need be, aimed at protecting the consumer from exploitation. Dr. Mody conceded that one of the fallouts of such an approach could be layoffs, given the fact that state-run enterprises tend to be overstaffed and private sector entities would seek to reduce the number of staff. This could create a major problem in countries with high unemployment and no social secur-

There are no readymade solutions to the problem, the

"Infrastructure services in developing countries traditionally have been delivered by monopolistic public enterprises or government departments, whose officers seldom have the managerial and financial autonomy to do their work properly and whose customers, actual and potential, seldom have their demands heard, much less considered."

Dr. Mody said the developing world was losing an average of $55 billion every year through inefficient cost-recovery and wastage. Hypothetically, the amount represents the cost of providing safe drinking water for one billion people for three years, he

"There should be a better methodology of cost recovery and increased efficiency," he said. In essence, infrastructure building and maintenance should be "run like an efficient business, a commercial venture.

An "unbundling" of gov-ernment-controlled infrastructure is the first step in reform, Dr. Mody said. It means separating the various distinct phases of operations and services.

World Bank expert said. But he suggested several options to counter the problem; these included the setting up of a fund to compensate retres-ched staff, including staff as "stakeholders," and granting contractual work rather than salaried employment.

Again, he said, the viability of these options varies from country to country and the concerned governments have to take their own decisions based on their circumstances and consideratioo.

But, he said, if the developing world has to achieve a better economic performance and advance towards a better life for its people, then it is inevitable that the governments adopt firm action towards allowing private sector participation in infrastructure huilding and maintenance.

Feuding undermines reconciliation in Zulu heartland

By Marius Bosch Reuter

DURBAN - Feuding between the African National Congress (ANC) and Inkatha Freedom Party could spark a fresh crisis in South Africa's volatile Zulu heartland.

Violence monitors say political killings are on the rise again after falling off in the immediate aftermath of the country's first all-race elections in April, when the ANC swept to power nationally.

More than 10,000 people, were killed in a decade of political violence leading up to the election.

Bickering between the two political rivals has frustrated reconciliation attempts and posed problems for the new regional cabinet dominated by Zulu chief Mangosuthu Buthelezi's Inkatha.

Mr. Bothelezi only agreed at the last minute to take part in the April dec-tions after holding out for virtual autonomy for the Kwazulu-Natal region.

Inkatha won control of the region after scraping a majority, with 50.3 per cent of the votes in the polls for a national parliament and nine provincial assemblies, sparking ANC claims of electoral fraud.

The ANC won 32.3 per cent and the National Party 11.2 per cent in Kwazulu-

Natal. ANC regional minister S'bu Ndebele told Reuters the political hickering could ignite a crisis.

"It makes reconciliation really difficult. I hope the realisation will come soon that we do not oeed this collision now," he said.

The independent humanrights commission, in figures for the week ended last Tuesday, reported 10 dead and 38 wounded. Although the death toll was slightly down from 23 in the previous week, the number of wounded had soared from seven.

"Things are definitely starting on the up again. Regional and national attempts at reconciliation do not mean much," said violence monitor Adrian Pole.

Mr. Ndebele said the ANC had decided to drop court action over the alleged voter fraud in the interest of reconciliation.

But he said the ANC remained powerful at grassroots level and could have made the region ungovernable through mass protests if it bad decided to contest the election results.

Inkatha wants Ulundi to replace Pietermaritzburg as the capital of Kwazulu-Natal. Already five Inkatha cabinet ministes are running their departments from Ulundi.

Businessmen and the ANC want Pietermaritzburg to remain the capital for commercial reasons and because it was already established as a regional seat with ample infrastructure from the previous white administration.

fakatha favours Ulundi, the traditional Zulu capital and bome to Buthelezi and most of his ministers. A simple majority in the regional legislature is all that is required to change the capital. And officials have accused Inkatha of trying to force the issue.

ANC firebrand and national member of parliament Peter Mokaba told a Durban rally during the past week that the ANC would not accept Ulundi as a capital.

Mr. Ndebele said Mr. Buthelezi, the former Kwazulu homeland chief minister and now home affairs minister in Nelson Mandela's coalition cabinet, was still firmly in control of Kwazulu-Natal, traditional home of South Africa's 8.5 million Zulus.

"He is not trying (to run it). He is running it," he said.

Mr. Pole, regional coordinator for a nationwide network of independent monitors, said people were still being bounded out of ANC or Inkatha strongholds if they did not support the "right" party.

"Ultimately all the conditions for political vio-lence are still there," he

New Italian government faces hard market test

MILAN (R) — The fledgling government of Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi faces the judgement of the financial markets this week as it struggles to overcome a growing lack of confidence in its economic policies.

Italian financial markets plunged last week as worries grew that Mr. Berlusconi's free-market administration would face problems stopping government accounts going even further into the red.

"It would be worrying if the turbulence of the markets continued over the next few days," Treasury Minister Lamberto Dini said Friday.

The administration Friday reaffirmed its commitment to controlling its finances after a week in which the stock market fell nearly eight per cent and government bond prices dropped sharply, shedding over six percentage points. Mr. Dini has promised that

He said the government would study new laws to neutralise the ruling or would pass revenue-raising measures to claw some of the cash

The government also committed itself to stabilising the relationship between economic growth and the deficit by 1995, a year ahead of previous targets.

"It is a strong statement on debt and growth that might be enough to stabilise mar-kets," said Mario Noera, economist at Banca d'America e d'Italia Sunday.

But it is not enough to declare ambitious targets, not enough to change the bad mood of the market," he Mr. Dini, whose job it is to ensure that Italy's budget deficit — the difference between spending and income - does not overshoot its already huge 160 trillion lire ($100 billion) target, said the economy would grow by 2.4 per cent next year.

They are pulling numbers and making bold predictions. there is nothing there the market does not already know," said Clayton Perry, analyst at Credit Suisse First Boston in London. "The one thing they have shown is their ability to procrastinate ... the markets will be sick," he added.

"An emergency reserve has been set up according to a decision by the governing board to be used in offsetting

In its annual report re-leased Sunday, it said the board had allocated 25 mil-through an allocation of five million AAD ($21 million) every year or 10 per cent of the AMF's income. Allocations will continue until the reserve reaches 25 per cent of the AMF's capital."

The AMF was set up in Abu Dhabi in 1976 with a paid-up capital of 326 million AAD ($1.37 billion) with the aim of helping member states in tackling their balance of payment deficits through soft-term loans. It has provided more than $2.5 billion in loans to its 21 members.

But lending activity sharply owed down after the 1990-1991 Gulf war before it came to a standstill in 1994 due to accumulating arrears.

The creation of the emergency reserve followed swelling arrears and alleged embezzlement of nearly $80 million by former AMF chairman Jawad Hashem during his term of office in the early 1980s. Mr. Hashem, a former Iraqi planning minister who has Canadian citizenship, was sentenced by an Abu Dbabi court for more than 240 years in absentia on 47 charges while five of his aides got smaller prison terms.

The AMF has sought his return through interpol but such attempts have failed because there is no extradition treaty between the United Arab Emirates (UAE) and Canada, where Mr. Hashem is currently living.

One of his convicted aides Mohammad Mehdi Saleh Bahr Al Ulum, has recently been arrested in Lebanon, which is considering a reques to extradite him to the UAE to serve the sentence against him. Mr. Hashem, Mr. Bahr Al Ulum, ex-director of the AMF investment department, and other defendents have denied the embezzlement charges

The AMF won a multimillion-dollar suit against Mr. Hashem in London last year but it continued to suffer from arrears, which have crained nearly half its resources and forced it to freeze activities in defaulting

Foreign Exchange Market Summary (June 13 — June 17, 1994)

AMMAN — The dollar lost considerable ground against major European currencies last week, while depreciating marginally against the yen. It ended the week 3.54 per cent lower against the mark, 1.69 per cent lower against sterling, 0.82 per cent lower against the yen and 3.73 per cent lower against the Swiss franc. The Swiss franc was the major performer of the week, as it bit record levels against the dollar.

The dollar witnessed substantial declines against other major currencies Monday, especially the mark. The demand for marks came in view of the success of the ruling German Christian Democratic Party in the recent European parliamentary elections. However, the dollar was reported to have gained some ground during the last trading hours due to traders' reaction to comment by U.S. Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen who indicated that the U.S. was concerned about the dollar's recent weakness.

Mr. Bentsen's comments boosted the dollar on expectations of Federal Reserve intervection.

The dollar moved bigher against the mark and Sterling Tuesday, while stabilising against the yen. The dollar rose as U.S. bond prices moved higher following the release of the May consumer prince index and retail sales report, which showed modest results, and at the same time belped diminish traders' fears of increasing inflationary pressures in the U.S.

The consumer price index showed a modest rise of 0.2 per ceot in the general index, comopared to a 0.1 per cent rise the previous month, while the core index rose by 0.3 per cent, compared to a 0.2 per cent rise in April. Retail sales showed a drop of 0.2 per cent in May, compared to a 1.1 per cent declice the previous month.

While stabiliting against the yeo, the dollar fell sharply against major European currencies Wednesday, especially the Swiss frame which closed at 1.3722 to the dollar, its highest level in 18 months. The franc rose in reaction to comments by Swiss National Bank official. The official had indicated Monday that the adoption of an easy monetary policy had been completed for now.

The comment created expectations that the Swiss National Bank would tighteo its monetary policy in early 1995. It also strengthened expectations that European interest rates in general had bottomed for the short-term.

In the meantime, another batch of U.S. economie reports was released that day, showing mixed results. Industrial production rose by 0.2 per cent in May, compared to a 0.1 per cent rise the previous month, while capacity utilisation declined to 83.5 per cent, from 83.6 per cent the previous month. The dollar rose slightly against the mark and yen, while stabilising against sterling, Thursday. Its rise materialised as the market reassessed the Korean situation, and on fear of Federal Reserve (FED) intervention in the event a dollar sell-off took place.

Nevertheless, the dollar dropped sharply against European currencies Friday. The dollar fell on comments by the chief economist of the Conference Board.

The prominent economist was reported to expect the dollar to decline by 10 per cent against the mark within 18 months. Her comments reinforced negative dollar sentiment, and drove the dollar to its lowest closing level against the mark this year. Rumoors of Fed intervention supported the dollar slightly during trading hours, but it continued its decline when the rumour was not substantiated.

The dollar thus closed at 1.6095 marks, 102.69 yen and at 1.5345 to the pound at the end of the week.

World Bank studying peace impact on Jordan

By Suleiman Al Khalidi Reuter

AMMAN - The World Bank is examining the poten-tial impact of Middle East peace on Jordan's economy at the Kingdom's request, a senior bank official said.

Ram Chopra, director of the Middle East and North Africa region at the World Bank, said a boom in Palestinian self-rule areas of Gaza and the West Bank posed a challenge to Jordan's econo-mic stability.

Bot he told a late night briefing on Saturday the potential gains for Jordan ootweighed the dangers, incloding the risk of pressure oo Jordan's dinar if it ceased being the main currency used by Palestinians.

"Jordan has the tools to benefit from the economic potential of peace; it does not depend on the action of others. But the international community can and should assist Jordan to use these tools," he said.

He said Jordan was positioned to gain immediately from construction in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

"Jordan will be able to participate in all this, both in technical assistance, either directly in contracts or acting as a subcontractor to other international firms that might win some of the contracts.' Mr. Chopra said.

Jordanians have expressed fears of being left out as Palestinians forge ties with Israel and that Palestinians in the West Bank could stop using Jordanian currency, sparking a run on foreign exchange reserves.

"Yes there are (currency) risks, but I do not wish to exaggerate them at all, they are manageable risks and Jordan has done a very good job of managiog these risks up to now," he said.

If the Palestine monetary aothority issued its own currency to replace other banknotes, Jordan would have to take back dinars. About 400 million dinars ($571 million) of Jordan's more than one billion dinars ($1.4 billion) are estimated to circulate in the West Bank.

Mr. Chopra said economic risks for Jordan were mainly because of the uncertainty about what will happen in the self-rule areas under a PLO-Israel accord. He said Jordan believed "things are moving too quickly."

Jordan and the PLO are still debating who will control future banks and whether the Jordanian currency will be used by the Palestinian administration.

Serb civilians flee Muslim Offensive in central Bosnia than 1,000 Bosnian Serb civilians have fled a Muslim offensive aimed at securing control of a strategic road in central Bosnia, Bosnian Serb Army (BSA) sources said Sunday.

They said the two-pronged Muslim attack on the settlement of Vozuca forced Serb women and children to seek refuge in nearby Doboj.
Fighting bas continued in the region in spite of a temporary ceasefire which took effect across Bosnia earlier this month.

BSA forces defending Vozuca control a 15 kilometres stretch of the road between the Muslim stron-gholds of Zenica and Tuzla. The sources said casualties during four days of fighting had been heavy on both sides but there had been no significant exchange of territory.

Inter-Muslim clashes contimued in the rebel Muslim northwestern Bihac pocket according to media reports, although U.N. peacekeeping forces in the area described it as relatively quiet. With the ceasefire in apparent jeopardy, conflicting signals emerged from the warring parties on the likely fate of a peace plan being prepared by the major pow-

The plan is expected to stand or fall on the details of a map of Bosnia's ethnic division that will give the Muslim and Croat Bosnian Federation 51 per cent of the country and Serbs the rest. The Serbs have won control of 70 per cent in the war.

Croatian President Franjo Tudjman said the proposed division was 'the only reasonable solution."

U.S. mediator Charles Redman, a member of the five nation "contact group" devising the peace plan, said in Zagreb Saturday that details of the proposed map had not yet been finalised.

The two sides in the Bosnian conflict differed strongly Saturday over whether the proposed map would be ceptable.

Croatian Foreign Minister Mate Granic told Reuters the newly formed Croat-Muslim Bosnian Federation would not block the peace deal and would probably accept the map backed by the major

"The patients undergo a similar procedures to in vitro fertilisation (IVF) with hormone stimulation and egg recovery," she. said. "But we can then stop the process and freeze the eggs. The breakthrough is that we now are going to offer this to . cancer patients and IVF patients as an alternative for them. This has never really been offered anywhere in the world to my knowledge." Previous research on animals had suggested that freezing eggs, instead of embryos, could lead to abnormalities. However, Dr. Gook told AFP that she and colleague Susan Osborn at

We have undertaken most of our research on human material and found that that is far more robust than animal material." Women cancer patients, whose eggs might be damaged by radiation treatment, could store their own eggs and later have them fertilised and implanted in procedures already developed for IVF, known as test-tube fertilisation. Several U.S. egg donation institutions were "very keen to have the technology," Dr. Gook said, because it could drastically cut the cost of transferring one women's eggs to another. They could take enough eggs from one donor and then store them and divide them between a number of recipients and that would decrease the cost of treatment." Of the four patients operated on to date.

Security forces mounted a buge manhunt Sunday to track down the gunmen from the ontlawed Ulster Volunteer Force (UVF) which claimed responsibility for the attack — the worst sectarian killing in Northern Irleand in eight months.

"There is no justification, no cause. The people who carried this out are the scum of the earth," said local councillor Pasty Toman, who knew all the victims.

Two gunmen burst into the pub where people were watching Ireland's I-0 victory on television and sprayed the occupants with automatic fire before fleeing in a vehicle which was later found ahandoned. "(There were) bodies piled on top of each other," Kieran O'toole, brother of the pub's owner, said in a television

It was the worst single seetrian shooting since a similar pub killing in Greysteel last October and followed a new spate of sectarian shootings in and around Belfast which killed four people in 48 bours last week.

Joe Hendron, of the moderate Social Democratic and Labour Party (SDLP), voiced the fears of many when he gunmen would try to pick a soft target" on Saturday night when the whole island

The Loughinisland attack appeared to be the gunmen's revenge both for the Sbankill Road shooting and the jailing last week of one of their top commanders, Laurence Maguire.

He was sentenced to life imprisonment for five murders and received jail terms totalling 480 years for a series of sectarian attacks in rural and urban areas in 1992.

The Loughinisland attack took place on the eve of an important date in the calender of the UVF's sworn foes Irish nationalists who seek to reunite the British province and the republie.

Leaders of Sinn Fein, political wing of the IRA, were due to meet outside Dublin Sunday to honour Wolfe Tone, an 18th century leader of militant Irish nationalism.

Sinn Fein officials are expected to give their verdict in about three weeks on a sixmonth old joint Anglo-Irish peace plan which would give Sinn Fein a seat at peace talks if the IRA ends its 25-year war and Sinn Fein renounces the use of violence,

Fighting restarts in Rwandan capital as France pushes plan

KIGALI (R) — Heavy fioghting erupted in the Rwandan capital Kigali early Sunday with rebels and government forces exchanging mortar, artillery and small arms fire across frontlines dividing the tomb-like city.

Explosions hoomed around the bills of the central African city and hursts of heavy machinegun fire crackled around sandy, blooddrenched streets. Multiple rocket launchers were also heard for the first ome in days, fuelling speculation the rebel Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF) was intent on delivering a knockout blow before the arrival of an outside military intervention forces.

A large column of black smoke wound into the sky above the government part of the city.

In Paris, French President Francois Mitterrand said Saturday his crack troops veterans of African crisis would arrive within days. He told a symposium they would lead an international force of other African and European countries.

France said it would send troops to Rwanda to save innocent civilians after the international community came under fire for failing to act to stop the genocide.

Aid groups say as many as 500,000 people may have been slaughtered since the April 6 killing of President Juvenal Habyarimana and his Burundi counterpart Cyprien Ntaryamira in a rocket attack on a plane returning from a regional summit.

But France's promised intervention could lead to more bloodshed and make peace even more elusive.

The United Nations said it managed to evacuate to safety Saturday several hundred civilians trapped bythe fighting. More forays were planned for Sunday.

But eight weeks after Rwanda was plunged into an orgy of political and ethnic bloodshed by the murder of its president, the killings still go on.

U.N. Assistance Mission In Rwanda (UNAMIR) military spokesman Major Gny Plante told reporters peacekeepers counted at least 50 bodies being loaded onto trucks outside the Sainte Famille Church complex in government-held territory.

"We saw 50 bodies being taken out, we estimate there are about 1,500 people still left there," he said.

Mr. Plante said it was not clear if the dead had been killed during a raid by the RPF on the complex to try and rescue members of the minority Tutsi tribe held hostage by the dreaded Hutu Interahamwe militia.

Militiamen retaliated for the raid, in which 600 Tutsi refugees were saved, hy attacking the Hotel Milles Collines and slaughtering an unknown number of Tutsis sheltering there. Maj. Plante said the U.N.

"As far as we are concerned, there is no-one left there who wishes to leave," he said, adding the U.N.'s small force in the city would try and evacuate the refugees from Sainte Famille Sunday. But beavy fighting around the complex Sunday delayed planned UNAMIR rescue missions. "We are fighting down in the centre of town hard today," RPF soldier Evariste Buregeya told Reuters.

"Our soldiers advance, and save people who have been hiding in buildings," he said, describing the rebel strategy of infiltrating urban areas, saving Tutsis and withdrawing again.

A Red Cross worker was killed Sunday when a mortar hit a hospital complex in the centre of Kigali, a U.N. military spokesman said.

Maj. Plante said the dead man was believed to be a local employee of the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC).

At least three other people were wounded in the incident but no other details were yet available," Maj. Plante said. It was not immediately clear if the mortar was fired by advancing rebels or their

Mr. Marlaud's visit follows an announcement by Paris that it would send forces to the Rwandan border ahead of an operation to halt massacres in the central African country, where half a million people may have been killed in less than two months. But the spokesman said the operation would only begin once approved by the United Nations, where Paris distributed a draft resolution at the Security Council over the weekend hoping it would be adopted Tuesday. The draft resolution, obtained hy Reuters, is drawn up under Chapter 7 of the U.N. Charter which permits the use of force. The French mibtary have kept tight-lipped silence about their moves but a wellinformed source said it appeared likely the jumping off point for French troops would be eastern Zaire.

"Uganda, which has close ties with the RPF, and Burundi, which has its own ultra-brittle ethnic situation to worry about, appear excluded," one well-informed source told Reuters. "Eastern Zaire seems likesince the adjoining area of Rwanda is nnder central (Hutu) government control and the Tutsi minority there is threatened. #### Students call for death of Bangladeshi feminist DHAKA (R) — Nearly 5,000 students from Dhaka's Islamic religious schools took to the streets Sunday to call for the death of Bangladeshi feminist writer Taslima Nasrin.

"Hang that infidel and punish her devilish friends," chanted the students, wearing traditional Muslim robes and white caps.

Nasrin, in her early 30s, is hiding after the publication of an interview in which she allegedly said that Islam's holy book, the Koran, should be "revised thoroughly." The government ordered Witnesses said the students, shouting alla-bu-akbar (Allah is Great), tried to march to parliament to register their protest against the controversial physician turned writer.

"She will not be forgiven," one said, "Death would be too lement a penalty compared to her crimes," yelled another.

Police stopped the students several blocs from the parliament building but witnesses said a few of their leaders were allowed to hand over a list of demands to the legislature's speaker.

The march followed weeks of street protests by Muslims angered by Nasrin's alleged remarks.

Most Swedes oppose EU membership STOCKHOLM (AFP) — A majority of Swedes who will vote in five months to decide if their country joins the European Union (EU) are opposed to the idea, according to an opinion poll published by the daily Dagens Nyheter Sunday. The Temo Institute poll showed that of the I,012 people questions. tioned between June 8 and 15, 43 per cent would vote 'no' to EU membership on Nov. 13, with 31 per cent 'yes' but 26 per cent had not yet made up their minds. Meanwhile the Swedish opposition Social Democratic Party voted Sunday to recommend membership to the 12-nation EU by 232 votes for with 103 against and two abstentions, a party spokesman said. The decision was important in light of a Temo poll published Saturday by Dagens Nyheter which showed the Social Democrats could form Sweden's next government, winning 51.52 per cent of the votes in the legislative elections coming Sept. 18. Political analysts noted that Swedish voters in the referendum were likely to be very much influenced by results of the Oct. 16

ZAMBOANGA, Philippines (R) - Gunmen attacked two mini-buses carrying civilians, killing three Muslims and wounding 12 others in a fresh outbreak of violence on the southern Philippine island of Basilan, police said Sunday. The attacks occurred while more than 1,000 Marines ringed a hideout of the Muslim fundamentalist Abu Sayyaf Group holding a Roman Catholic priest for a ransom of three million pesos ($1)1,000). Police said a Muslim preacher and two others were killed and their nine companions wounded Sunday when gunmen opened fire on their vehicle in Lamitan town, 25 kilometres from the Abu Sayyaf camp under military siege. On Saturday, armed men fired on another mini-bus carrying civilians, wounding three occupants. A police spokesman refused to speculate whether the attacks were linked to the massacre in Basilan of 15 Chrisoan hostages by the Abu Sayyaf guerrillas on June 8, saying he did not want to fan Muslim-Christian conflict. On Saturday, unknown gunmen shot dead former Muslim rebel leader Dambong Sali in Zamboanga City.

Strike paralyses Kashmir

SRINAGAR, India (AFP) - A strike paralysed the Indian state of Kashmir Sunday, a day after some 50 people were injured when border guards fitted on a crowd protesting the deaths of two militants, police said here. Shops, government offices and schools were closed and traffic went off the roads across the Kashmir Valley in response to calls by a Muslim separatist group to denounce "recent killings by Indian security forces." Indian authorities claim to have killed about 50 Muslim guerrillas in gunbattles in the past four days. Sunday's protest came after the Border Security Force (BSF) fired on hundreds of demonstrators who defied a curfew to protest the death of two rebels in the district of Pulwama late Saturday, witnesses said. The firing left some 50 people injured, the witnesses said. The troops had earlier beaten the protestors with truncheons.

"So-called 'human rights lawyers' or 'democracy lawyers,' who might jeopardise China's social stability and investment environment, will be barred from coming in," Shen Bailu, a Justice Ministry official, told the Xinhua News Agency. The number of foreign law offices will grow from the present 41 to about 100 by the end of 1995, Mr. Shen said.

Italy in mourning after defeat

Their only other World Cup final appearance euded with a 1-0 defeat by Italy in the quarter-finals in Rome four years ago.

Italy's coach Arrigo Sacchi, under pressure from an Italian media baffled by his frequent changes in personnel and tactics, tried to play down the importance of defeat in a group which also includes Norway and Mexico.

Sacchi had spoken about the strength of the Irish and bis worst fears were realised when they took the lead in the 12th minute through a speculative shot by veteran Ray Houghton.

Exuberant celebration as Ireland beat Italy

NEW YORK (R) - New York became a sea of Green Saturday as Irish fans exuberantly celebrated Ireland's dramatic victory over Italy. "I can go home in a coffin now after this win," said Paul Rochford of Dublin. All over New York and New Jersey, where the game was played before 74,000 fans, the Irish erupted into estatic celebration. When Ireland scored what proved to be the winning goal, the stadium went wild, and Irish fans leaped to their feet, dancing, singing, cheering and embracing one another. The Irish fans, dubbed "Jack's Army" after coach Jack Charlton, the English manager of the team and known as Ireland's favourite Englishman, seemed to have taken over the stadium with banners and flags and singing.

"There's hardly an Italian in sight," said Brendan Mullen of Dublin, and now living in Boston, "Jack's Army rules the stadium." Irish banners covered the stadium and Irish voices seemed to cheet incessantly, as Ireland fought off Italy's attempts to equalise in the second half. "I'm not sure I have any influence left up there, hut I'm praying fot Ireland," said Andrea Rochford of Duhlin. "I'll get heart failure if this game doesn't end soon," said Feargal O'Toole.

It did. And he did not: Instead, he and thousands of other Irish fans erupted as their team held off Italy, billed as one of the favourites to win the World Cup.

It was not just a victory for Ireland. It was sweet revenge because four years ago Italy robbed Ireland of a win in the 1990 quarter finals by exactly the same score.

Romania stun Colombia 3-1

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Maybe Pele overestimated Colombia's potential just a little bit.

Striker Florin Raducioiu scored one goal in each half as Romania surprised Colombia 3-1 in a Group A game Saturday before 91,856 fans at the Rose Bowl.

We respected Colombia, but we insisted and wanted this victory," said Raducioin, who plays for European champions cup winner AC Milan in Italy.

"It was a very good victory because we beat a very good team that remains a favourite for this World Cup. Colomhia ha a very technical team with natural qualities. But today we played very well.

Colombia, rated as the best of the 24 qualifiers coming into the World Cup by Pete, started well but could not come back after falling behind 2-0 after 34 minutes against a defensive-minded team that relied heavily on counter attacks.

"The first goal was a typical counter-attack goal, Raducioui said. "My second goal was the same. I just took the ball from the goalkeeper and put it into the net.'

The United States tied Switzerland I-1 earlier Saturday in the other Group A game at the Silverdome in Pontiac, Mich., the first match played indoors in World Cup history. Romania, which has the second youngest squad in the World Cup with an average age of 25.1 struck unexpectedly and fiercely after the Colombians carried the play for the first 15 minutes of the game.

Raducioiu scored on the Romanians' first chance after a brilliant individual move in the 15th minute that silenced the mostly pro-Colombian Midfielder Gheorgbe Hagi, another foreign-based player who is a star for Brescia in Italy, set up Raducioiu's both tallies and scored the second for a 2-0 lead in the 33rd minute.

"It was a great victory for us," Hagi said. "Colombia is a very strong team. We respected them. But all games are very tough. We bave to be well prepared for each of Raducioiu's first goal came after a fast counter-attack. Hagi struck a deep pass from midfield to Raducioui, who faked two defenders before firing a right-footed drive from 18 yards (metres) past goalkeeper Oscar Cordoba.

Hagi's goal was a gem. After noticing that Cordoba had ventured too far from his line, Hagi hit a wonderful lob from about 35 yards over the helpless goalkeeper.

Ten minutes earlier, Hagi came close as he chipped a shot from long range that Coroba had to dive to push

Wilson Perez set up Colombia's lone goal with a corner kick three minutes before halftime, bending a ball for Adolfo Valencia, who scored on a header from close range through heavy traffic. Colombia, which had only lost twice since July 1991, had a golden opportunity to tie in the 61st minute as striker Faustino Asprilla broke down the right flank. But his close-range shot flew just wide of Cordoba's post.

Aspirlla also had several scoring chances during the first 15 minutes on the game when the Colombians pressed hard for an early goal. Catlos Valderrama, the 1993 South American player of the year, did not play well in the first half, missing several easy passes. But Valderrama, who has hen bothered by a slight injury in his right knee in the last three games, improved after the break.

Romania's clincher came with just three minutes remaining after Hagi struck another long pass up to Raducioin. Cordoba came out to challenge him but the Romanian striker tapped the ball past him and shot into the open net from a sharp YAOUNDE (AFP) — Every player and coach in Cameroon's World Cup squad will earn $10,000 for playing in the United States, plus another $5,000 for each win, their government said Saturday night. Communications Minister Augustin Kountchou Kuoumegui said the initial payment will cost the state 150 million CFA francs ($250,000). The minister added that a national campaign to raise finance for the Indomitable Lions' trip to the States bad yielded 298 million CFA francs ($500,000), of which a third bad come from President Paul Biya.

Iran follows Islamic broadcasts

TEHRAN (R) - Iranian viewers were surprised to see spectators wearing winter coats during the first World Cup match played Friday in Chicago in sweltering heat. For the first time since the Islamic revolution in 1979 Iranians were able to enjoy live broadcasts of World Cup games. But "un-Islamic scenes" of spectators were apparently replaced with pre-recorded footage of fans wearing coats, gloves and hats taken at other games played in the winter. The aim was apparently to avoid showing women in revealing clothes such as shorts and low cut tops which go against the Iranian dress code for women of a black robe covering all their body except the face and hands. "The correction of un-Islamic scenes is possible with several seconds of delay which is not a problem," Javaad Motaqi, an advisor to the director of Iran's radio and televsion, said.

Fans stone Mexican embassy

LA PAZ. Bolivia (AP) — Hundreds of soccer fans angry at a call by a Mexican referee in the World Cup opener threw rocks and other objects at the Mexican embassy Friday night, smashing windows and some doors. No injuries were reported, police said. Bolivia lost to Germany I-0 Friday in a game in which its star player, Marco Antonio Etcheverry, was sent off in the second half for rough play, three minutes after entering the game. Many Bolivians believed Germany's goal by Jurgen Klinsmann after 61 minutes came from an offside position. Mexican referee Arturo Brizio and the linesmen allowed the play to continue. Once the game was over, thousands of fans took to the streets in La Paz to cheer their team's play and after a few minutes headed toward the Mexican embassy. National police commander, General Luis Rocha, said many of the building's windows and some doors were smashed, but that no one was injured. Police dispersed the crowd peacefully.

The Dutch, on their own admission, know virtually nothing about the Saudi team while the Saudis, despite approaching the game with a confidence bordering on arrogance, will be playing in their first World Cup finals match.

"All we, the players, have seen of them is half of their qualifying match against Japan, on a video," said Dennis Bergkamp, who is expected to play in a withdrawn striking role Monday evening. "It is not too much of a problem for us, though, as we have been concentrating on our own game."

According to those who have seen Saudi Arahia play. a tight, slow and difficult match may be in prospect for the Dutch who could be reminded of the difficulties posed by Egypt in similar circumstances in Italy four

"We shall be attacking and looking for goals, as that is our style," said Bergkamp. "I know it is hot and they may be more familiar with playing in high temperatures. but we feel we can cope with both the heat and the opposition if we play well.' After losing two World Cup finals, in 1974 and 1978, when they were beaten by the hosts each time, and failing to live up to their reputation as pre-tournament favourites in Italy in 1990, the Dutch are long overdue another good

To judge from their mood after settling into the sumptuous Ritz-Carlton *Hotel some 20 miles (30 km) west of Washington, on Saturday, there is also plenty of optimism among the players.

"I am motivated by our past failings, but not completely," said Ronald Koeman, the Barcelona libero whose long-range shooting may be a particularly potent weapon against the physically smaller Saudi team. "We know what we are capable of

and our real motivation is to fulfil that potential." Dutch coach Dick Advocaat gave little away about his team's likely tactics or lineup, but admitted he was considering various possibilities which suggested defensive midfielder Frank Rijkaard could start in a right-back position with an aggressive attacking brief.

Advocaat said he was concerned the Saudis may play with only one striker and break into space on the flanks, a tactic which could be stopped by using an extra player at the back.

But it is likely the Dutch will play their normal free-wheeling 3-4-3 formation with two wingers and it will be a surprise if, as the outstanding team in the group, they cannot enjoy a comfortable victory.

The Saudis, for whom Mohammad Abdul Jawad is a dependable captain and defensive force, will rely on defence in depth, possession when possible in midfield and counter-attacks led by Majed Abdullah, 34, dubbed the "Desert Pele."

According to statistics distributed by the Saudi federation, he has scored 118 goals in 166 internationals.

The effect of their attacks is likely to be limited, as Abdullah is understood to be less than fully-fit, having done less training than most of his team-mates.

Neither squad has significant injuries and the coaches are expected to name their teams only shortly before kickoff. Probable teams:

Romario against Russia

SAN FRANCISCO (R) - Brazil, promising a feast of attacking soccer, are looking to strikers Beheto and Romanio to give them the perfect start to their World Cup campaign against Russia Monday.

Both sides have identified the deadly duo as the key players in the opening Group B clash in San Francisco, pitting Brazil's individualism and flair against Russia's coldly calculated team approach.

Romario is an incredible player. He can have a quiet game and then he can decide everything in one moment," Brazilian coach Carlos Alberto Parreira told reporters.

"Bebeto and Romario are the ones we will have to watch and guard closely," Russian striker Sergei Yuran Romario, 28, and Bebeto. 30, are perhaps the most feared strike force in the world. Between them they have scored more than 50 international goals.

Backed by their passionate fans who heat out salsa rhythms throughout matches and have arrived in hordes. the three-times world champions are setting out confidently to win the cup for the first time since 1970.

Even the lost of experienced defender Ricardo Gomes, who will miss the tournament because of a lastminute injury, has failed to dampen enthusiasm. He is likely to be replaced in the team by Aldair or Marcio Santos.

The beat and humidity are also likely to work in Brazil's favour in a group which also inelades Cameroon and Sweden.

"Brazil will play with style. We have no choice because that's the only way we know how to play," Parreira said. "Our only defensive aim is to get the hall back when the opposition has it. Once we get the ball, our players have all the freedom they want,"

Russia, competing for the first time in the World Cup following the break up of the Soviet Union, are not saying how they plan to snuff out Bebeto and Romario.

Robbed of six players by a rebellion against coach Pavel Sadyrin before the squad was chosen, their options are limited and they are likely to go for a draw.

'Against a team as strong as Brazil, it would probably be good (to draw)," Sadyrin said. "You can't beat them in technique. Probably the only way is through teamwork."

Sadryin has no major injury worries hut central defender Voktor Onopko, the captain, will miss the match because of a red card picked up in the final qualifying match against Greece. The Russian team will be named as late as possible.

Russia's tactics will probably be to closely mark Bebeto and Romario and look to Yuran, their dangerman up front, to score on the counter

Their other main hope will be that the huge pressure on Brazil, for whomn second place would be regarded back home as a failure, will prove too much for the South Americans.

Belgium survive Moroccan grilling to win duel 1-0

ORLANDO, Florida (AFP) — Marc Degryse's early goal gave Belgium a 1-0 victory in their World Cup Group F opener here Sunday but opponents Morocco were left to curse their luck after striker Mohammad Chaoueh twice hit the woodwork.

In the first meeting between the countries Morocco quickly showed they would not be overawed by supposedly superior opponents when Mustapha Hajdi's shot from an acute angle was blocked by Belgian goalkeeper Michel Preud'homme.

Five minutes later Degryse effort of a frenetic first half when he curled a shot wide of the right-hand post from outside the penalty area.

Little over a minute later he same player opened the scoring. The lively Luc Nilis took advantage of a stroke of luck when the ball came back to him off a defender to cross left-footed for Degryse to send an unstoppable nearpost header past Khalil Azmi into the far corner.

Morocco were then lucky not to fall further behind when Josip Weber's downward header from Rudi had Belgium's first notable Smidts' left-wing cross was only prevented from going into the net when it hit Belgian midfielder Enzo Scifo.

Weber, the Croatian-born striker grauted Belgian citizenship in March, was making his World Cup debut after nine goals in his first three outings for the national Preud'homme had to be at his sharpest to push a shot round the post after 23 minutes while the Belgians were fortunate soon afterwards when there was no Moroccan on hand to convert Hajdi's cross as it rolled across the face of the goal.

At the other end Nilis's direct running continued to trouble Morocco's defence and wehn the forward danced past two players in the area only the legs of goalkeeper Khalil Azmi denied him.

Four minutes from the interval Morocco were denied an equaliser when Chaouch crashed a shot against the bar from 20 metres.

Morocco pegged Belgium back in their own half for long periods after the interval as the heat and humidity began to take its toll.

Pierce withdrawal puts focus on Navratilova

LONDON (R) - The 11thhour withdrawal of Mary Pierce has thrust Martina Navratilova ever more firmly under the microscope when what she has vowed will be her final Wimbledon begins

"I would find it difficult to bow out on an outside court," she said.

The draw has been kind to her, if she can get by the early rounds without the drop in form that she showed in defeat by fellow American Meredith McGrath - the eventual winner - at Eastbourne last week.

The later rounds have spared her a meeting with Graf until the final though to get there she may have to beat the French champion, Arantxa Sanchez Vicario, in the semifinals.

North showed three sons, South went for the whole enchilada.

West led a heart against seven spades and declarer adopted a res-sonable line. The opening lead was ruffed in hand and trumps were drawn in two rounds. Next came the drawn in two rounds. Declarer returned to hand with a diamond ruff and tried the club finesser—down one. Rather unlucky, in our opinion. But a slightly better line did exist.

PHNOM PENH (R) — Cambodia's First Prime Minister Prince Ranariddh said the country's head of state King Norodom Sihanouk was "100 per cent recovered" from cancer. Prince Ranariddh made the statement on national television Saturday night describing the news as "very good." "I would like to take this opportunity to in-form you all of some very good news. "We have just been informed from Beijing that our venerable king has 100 per cent recovered from terrible cancer — great news for today — congratula-tions," Prince Ranariddh said. He said despite the king's recovery from cancer, his Chinese doctors had advised that the 71 year-old monarch remain in Beijing for another six weeks before being allowed to return to Phnom Penh. King Sihanouk said earlier he was also suffering from arterioclerosis and nuspecified liver problems.

LONDON (AFP) — A British student, knocked down by a race horse as he ran across the track of Royal Ascot, yards (metres) from the queen's box, wrote to Queen Elizabeth II, apologising and saying he bad drunk too much. "I was attempting to cross the racecourse to get into the Silver Ring when the accident happened. I was not trying to min the race. I realise I had too much to drink and made a fool of myself," wrote James Florey, 21, in a letter delivered to the queen and printed in Saturday's Sun. Describing him as a "boozy clot," the tabloid also carried an interview with Mr. Forey, who quoted bim as saying: "When I woke up I couldn't even remember seeing a horse, let alone hitting one." The jockey and horse were also brought down in the collision, but were unhurt. Mr. Florey later received a "get well" telephone call on behalf of the queen as he lay recovering in hospital where he was treated for head injuries. On Friday, Mr. Florey, who wants to be a iournalist, was reported to have been bustled away from the hospital by "a national newspaper," which had paid him for his story and offered to belp bim with his reporting career. The World Bank official noted that the PLO had set up the Palestine Economic Conneil for Development and Reconstruction (PEC-DAR), drawn up its byelaws, appointed a board of directors for the council and was in the process of hiring staff. The World Bank, "at the request of the Palestinians," is "actively involved" with the council, Mr. Chopra bit slower than we expected." Mr. Chopra did not comment directly on reports from Tunis quoting PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat that the $42 million release had not reached the PLO. The World Bank is hesitant to release any moncy without a budget report from Mr. Arafat outlining how the money was to be spent, the reports said.

But Mr. Chopra recalled that Nabil Shaath, the chief Palestinian autonomy negotiator, had expressed "saiisfaction" with the donors' decision in Paris.

The World Bank has three distinct phases of channelling the aid to the Palestinians. Mr. Chopra said. The first is the Holst Fund - named after the late Norwegian Foreign Minister Johann Juergen Holst who played a key role in working out the Israel-PLO autonomy accord. The fund was created in January and was expanded recently.

The fund will have $55 million to $60 million of the donors' aid and the money currently sent to the West Bank and Gaza Strip comes from this fund. Mr. Chopra said. The money will be used for start-up costs of Palestinian self-rule, he said, adding that the needs of the Palestinians in this context have been met until for the next "two-to-three months."

And a technical assistance fund of $35 million has been set up and operated by the World Bank at the request of the donors. This fund will be drawn upon to pay for feasibility studies of projects and related activities.

A murd fund will be the source for actual financing of infrastructure and development projects, Dr. Chopra said. Work is under way on nearly 20 projects which are in the implementation stage, he added without elaboration.

Asked how he viewed complaints from some quarters that the $2.2 billion aid was "too much for two million people," Mr. Chopra said: The World Bank does not believe it is too much for two million people." In reply to a question how the World Bank saw the actual benefits of peace in the occupied territories. Mr. Chopra said "the Palestinians could expect to see better roads, better schools, better hospitals... (and) their garbage collected" in six Northern forces are threatening to storm Aden, where 36 people have been killed by shelling since Thursday. Rocket attacks Saturday wounded 17 people near Aden's airport, a Kuwait news agency correspondent in the city reported.

An agreement by the leaders of North and South Korea to hold an unprecedented summit was another outcome of the Carter trip.

The White House reaffirmed Saturday it was willing to hold a third round of talks with North Korea if Pyongyang froze its nuclear programme during the talks.

An influential Democratic senator said Sunday the United States should bomb North Korea if it continues to defy international efforts to open its nuclear facilities to inspection.
